Baltimore Annual Conference. In the Conference, yesterday, on motion of Ret. N. Wilson, Rev. A. S. Hank, a supernumerary member of East Baltimore Conference, was transferred to this Conference, and

The Conference took up the petition of Res. Stephen Smith, now on the list of superannuated preachers, to be restored to efperantum membership. The Conference voted to continue him on the list of superannuated tution for a Conference Missionary Society, made a report through their chairman, Rev. N. Wilson, which was unanimously adopted. the Sunday School Union, addressed the Con-committee on the subject of a Conference pamake a speech, but he wished to state that they had heard that the committee had adjointly altered the object of the Conference in their report. Such was not the fact. The committee had been honest in their report. The speaker had not intended in his previous remarks to accuse the membership of Baltimore city with disaffection towards the Baltimore Conference. Let the South do her own work in her own way, and we would do our work in ours. Baltimore was the last city in the world to desert the good ship of Methodism. There was great necessity for it. From New York on the east, to Cincinnati on the west, this Conference had no religious official organ. An immense scope of country was continually suffering because of this great want. If we could bare a journal here in the centre of our territory, we could disabuse the public mind of ous agents. He believed there was a great deal of good and of evil, both in the North and South. This paper, if established, would raise a blaze in places where they were now at peace. If this paper was to be introduced he lifted up his hands in the name of God in opposition to it. He would never recommend, nor take it, but would regard it as a mischievous instrument, calculated to stir up strife between the brethren of the church of Rev. Thomas Sewall followed, taking the same ground with the last speaker. He wished, with him, to have it to say in future that he had with the minority lifted up his hand to stay this project. He asked the brethren to look back over the circuits which they had traveled, and see if they could find great dearth of religious literature that had been put up in argument. With all this controversy about slavery in the capitol of the nation, need we Methodist preachers drag it into the consecrated walls of the Church! He hoped in God, not!

Mr. Clem stated, in behalf of the committee that they disclaimed, in every sense of the word, the charge of endeavoring to make ship. Some years since another animal of the proposed journal a controversial one .-Directly the opposite was the object of the ommittee. Rev. Isaac Gibson here made a few remarks in relation to the pending question, and advocated the institution of the proposed journal with many well put arguments. After some further discussion, the proposi tion to establish the paper was carried, and t was decided that its name should be "The Baltimore Christian Advocate."-- Washing-Several memorials and resolutions, referring to private matters, were introduced and appropriately disposed of.

Mr. Houston submitted a joint resolution from the Legislature of Texas, relative to the Kansas imbroglio, which provides, in certain contingencies, for that State taking part in a Southern Convention, which it recommends shall be called to maintain the principle of "State rights," which it declares would be violated should Congress refuse to admit Kansas under the Lecompton constitution.

Mr. Trumbull introduced a resolution requesting the Secretary of War to inquire if Southern mails are to be so transferred when the river may be frezen up. The Rock Island, in Illinois, is not a feasible and available point for military purposes.

The Senate, on Saturday, acted upon a presented a memorial from sundry citizens of few private bills, besides passing a supple-Minnesota, praying the passage of a home- ment to the militia bill, in order to remedy some defects in the bill recently passed .-They also passed a resolution proposing to the House to adjourn sine die at 10 o'clock at night.

The House did little save pass the supplementary militia bill. The remainder of the morning session was consumed in a debate on the bill "to prevent the unlawful bridging of the Ohio," in which the representatives from the "pan handle," and the member from Wheeling, were engaged. A good deal of discussion and desultory talk took place upon points of order, and there was a little skirmishing upon the subject of the opposition to the extension of the session, in which there was some sharp-shooting; Mr. Caperton leading on the side of the extension, and Mr. Seddon on that of the immediate conclusion of the session-one side sharply criticising the reasons for opposing the extension, the other side with equal ex citement defending these reasons, and retorting upon their assailants. The Speaker, in the meantime, was signing the bills which had passed, and with the help of the Clerks, half pay to his rank as a naval officer, of getting ready for adjourning. Thus was the morning session passed. At 7 o'clock, P. M., the members of both Houses struggled through the snow to the capitol, where a half hour, before the Speakers took their Chairs, was spent in discussing the unsatisfactory state in which the public business would be left, and comparing notes as to the account they would render their respective constituencies of their stewshape. They were unwilling to admit it as ardship. Since the forenoon session, howa claim, as that would controvert the sen- ever, it was apparent that some cause had operated upon the minds of members; for although the majority were annoyed at the obstruction opposed by the minority to their The consideration of the Kansas bill was desire to prolong the session to complete the public business, they were more calm and showed a resignation to the condition of things, which justified a suspicion on the part of the minority of the truth of the rumor. that the Executive authority would be interposed to prolong their sojourn in Richmond. This reflection diminished their seeming satversaries. The rumor at last became prevaleat that the Governor would promptly issue his proclamation for an extra session.

The Senate resumed its session and oecupied itself in matters not deserving special notice, and finally sent its message of readiness to adjourn to the House. That body responding, President Jackson of the Senate pronounced his valedictory; but immediately bim. This proved to be the Proclamation of the General Assembly. It was attentively listened to, and at its conclusion the members testified their approval of it by loud applause; and in a little while the chamber was deserted.
